There are a variety of roles in journalism including news correspondents, reporters, sub-editors, photo journalists, football reporters, music or food critics or property specialists. Traditionally journalists have been employed by local, regional, and national newspapers, radio or television. Now with increasing use of technology journalists can also work for online media companies.

The role of a journalist is diverse and can include interviewing people, producing articles for a newspaper, researching and reporting on fraud in local government or recounting events such as at a village summer fair.

Many journalists specialise with their reporting. This can include working in war zones, politics, sports or finance and some journalists work under cover to expose the truth about a product or service. Today people need and want information about everything and journalists are employed to deliver this.

Important skills are ‘excellent plain English writing, accurate note taking, proofreading skills and verbal communication skills’

Other skills required are:
- Research and analysis with the ability to analyse and translate complex information and ideas
- Problem solving, data analysis, critical thinking
- Work task prioritisation, time management and an ability to withstand pressure
- High levels of emotional intelligence when seeking to extract information from reluctant subjects
- Resourcefulness and tenacity, and being able to overcome criticism
- Self motivation and management
- Attention to detail
- The ability to listen and to work productively in a team
- The right attitude

Journalism is a buoyant sector. There are approximately 64,000 people working in journalism in the UK.
